ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

We should like to thank all those who in various ways have contributed to the production of this volume: the staff of the Bristol Record Office and Mr. G. Langley and Mrs. M. Crudge of the Bristol Reference Library who willingly met our needs, and Dr. Basil Cottle who helped to identify the many difficult place names. We are particularly grateful to Miss Mary Williams, the City Archivist for her unfailing help.

I acknowledge with thanks a grant from the Marc Fitch Fund.

EDITORIAL METHOD

The apprenticeship enrolments are written in Latin and have been translated into English and calendared. There are, however, some memoranda written in English and these have been transcribed in the form in which they appear and placed within inverted commas.

For convenience of reference each entry has been numbered in consecutive sequence and this is the number which is given in the index.

Editorial comment such as the modern version of place names has been put in square brackets.

The apprenticeship enrolments begin with the date written above the entry. In the margin against each entry is the name of the master with the letters viijd. The sum of 8d. was the Town Clerk's fee for enrolment of each indenture. In calendaring, these marginal notes have been omitted, but other marginal notes have been included.

A specimen of the first entry is as follows:

[p. 239] ij die^o octobris [1542]

h etc Richardus Edwardes filius Thome Edwardes de Bristoll' whytawer posuit seipsum apprenticium Willelmo Rede coryer Civitate Bristoll' et Johanne uxori eius tam in arte de Coryour quam etc a die dati presentis usque finem termini septem annorum extunc etc Soluetque xvij solidos sterling' ac iiijd. per liberate Bristoll' predicte cum duplice apparatu etc nomine etc.

Words shown in italics, being common form, are not included in the calendar. In addition the scribe condensed several standard clauses, indicated by etceteras. These are explained by Denzil Hollis in Part I, p.13.

INTRODUCTION

Bristol possesses an almost complete set of Apprentice Books from 1532 and a complementary series of Burgess Books from 1558. Those admitted to the freedom of the city between the years 1532 and 1558 can be found in the Mayor's Audits¹ which contain lists of burgesses giving the fees which they paid, so that in fact there is a record of those made free from 1532.

The volume of apprenticeship indentures now edited covers the period 1542-1552 and is Part II of the first Bristol Apprentice Book, 1532-1565.² The first part, 1532-1542 was transcribed and edited by Denzil Hollis and published by the Bristol Record Society in 1948.³ In the Introduction of Part 1, Mr. Hollis described the format of the volume in great detail and discussed the system of apprenticeship in Bristol using all relevant contemporary records.

Recently Dr. Anne Yarborough of the Catholic University of America has made a study of the system of apprentices in Bristol before the Statute of Artificers for a Ph.D. dissertation, 'Bristol's apprentices in the 16th century: the cultural and regional mobility of an age group.' Subsequently, she has written an article entitled 'Geographical and social origins of Bristol apprentices, 1542-1565' which will be published shortly.⁴ In view of the work done by Mr. Hollis and that already done and still being done by Dr. Yarborough it is not the intention of this present Introduction to consider the significance of the indentures enrolled, but only to comment briefly on points of interest.

The enrolments show that an organised system of recording the indentures was in operation at least thirty years before the Statute of Artificers and Apprentices of 1563 which initiated a national regulation of apprenticeship uniform for towns and country. The system in Bristol was largely based on the customs of London.⁵

5. The Maire of Bristowe is Kalendar ed. by L. Toulmin-Smith, (Camden Society 1872), pp.102-103.

The indentures were enrolled at the Tolzey, 'the place of common audience' which was on the corner of Corn Street and Broad Street. In 1551, after the dissolution of the chantries, the Tolzey was rebuilt on the same site but extended to include that part of the church of St. Ewen which contained the chapel of the guild of the Merchant Tailors.

The Town Clerk was responsible for seeing that the indentures were properly enrolled for which he received 8d. 'for a pair of indentures of apprentice'.⁶ The mayor, sheriffs and aldermen as justices of the peace heard all disputes concerning the contracts of apprenticeship (84, 154 and others).

During the period 1542-1552, about 1800 apprentices were enrolled of which 50 were women. Of the 50 women, seven were apprenticed as shepsters or seamstresses, seventeen as housewives and of the remaining 26 no occupation is given. For sixteen women, the master promised to pay 4s. 6d. for the liberty of the city. However, there is no evidence that any of them took up their freedom. In fact during the period no women were made free by apprenticeship, although several were admitted because of patrimony or marriage. About two-thirds of the youths apprenticed are listed as due to receive from their masters the fee of 4s. 6d. As the Burgess Books do not begin before 1558 and the early volumes of Mayor's Audits are incomplete it is impossible to say how many apprentices did become burgesses or freemen.

Whilst it is generally accepted that the usual term of apprenticeship was seven years, in fact only one third of the apprentices served seven years, the others served any number of years from eight to sixteen. As they could not be admitted as freemen until they were at least twenty-one years of age, it is likely that some of those who served for more years were young when apprenticed. In some cases their fathers were dead. In several cases the master had to send the boy to school for a year or more (1362 and others) and in two cases (1577, 1592) 'until he can profitely write and rede' or 'write and read and caste accompt'. In one case there is evidence that the boy's father base the cost of schooling (1070).

Young men apprenticed to merchants were often sent overseas, usually to Spain and Portugal, but sometimes to Flanders and France, at the expense of their masters, to gain experience. Those training to be merchants often spent the last one or two years of their term of apprenticeship abroad. The apprentice was required to carry out transactions on behalf of his master.

6. The Great Red Book of Bristol, ed. E.W.W. Veale, (Bristol Record Society, vol.IV, 1933) p.120.

William Coke the son of a Bristol merchant and apprenticed to another merchant, John Gurney was sent overseas for two years 'for his own erudition' in the cause of marketing. He was given one hundred ducats with which he was to trade, rendering an account to his master and receiving for himself reasonable profits (666). Some fifty years later young men going abroad to gain knowledge and experience in trade would have had the advantage of using The Merchants Avizo,⁷ a manual of information and advice on the problems they would meet when they undertook the responsible task of acting as agents for their masters in foreign countries.

The successful ones were duly rewarded. Henry Manning, a merchant of Bristol agreed to make his apprentice, Anthony Snigge, free of the company of merchants in Flanders (1544), and another apprentice was to be made free and fellow merchant in Brabant (1767).

As far as artisans were concerned, apprentices were often required to serve a covenant year and the guilds frequently made this condition compulsory. Within the period 1542-1552, only fifteen apprentices are recorded as serving a covenant year. During that time, the master agreed to pay the apprentice wages, ranging from 8d. a week (1341) or 6d. a week with meat and drink (1680) to £4 at the end of the period (1386). From the Merchants Tailors Company book the covenant period was sometimes less than one year.⁸

These indentures are particularly valuable in that they give lists of tools and other equipment which the apprentices are to receive at the end of their apprenticeship.⁹ It is interesting to note that three of the youths apprenticed to innholders were given musical instruments (1324, 1339, 1507), no doubt to entertain those frequenting the inns. Both males and females received beds and bedding and articles of clothing. However, they could have the money in lieu of the article, a bed being valued at 10s (29), and a gown at 13s 4d. (66).

It was usual for the apprentice to live in his master's house and to be cared for by his master's wife who was a party to the contract. They provided the boy or girl with meat, drink and apparel. The usual covenants to supply meat and drink and double apparel are not calendared because all the apprentices appear to have received these. Double apparel is explained (1185) as being one for working days and one for festival days.

9. see Appendix III.

One apprentice is described as being the son of John Sare whose occupation is 'literatus' (636) and a second one is apprenticed to John Sebright a 'literatus' (1229). Both Sare and Sebright were notary publics.

There are twelve entries (381-2, 1029, 1637-8, 1655, 1657, 1657-8, 1756, 1809-11) which are not connected with apprenticeship. They relate to matters brought before the mayor for settlement or approval. It is likely that when the mayor and aldermen conducted their business at the counter of the Tolzey, a clerk in attendance would record all business in one book which became known as the rough book. Later a fair copy was made transferring the enrolments to the Apprentice Book and perhaps the entries concerning wheat, malt and brewing and selling of ale to the records of Assize of Bread and Ale. At a later date such rough entry books have survived. This may account for the fact that the entries are not always in strict chronological order and that others are added in a different hand.
